Commentary Painted with a deep and rich pink ground (famille rose), this jar and its pair, 1915.8.57, feature polychrome chrysanthe-mums and vignettes in reserve. The main panels on both sides of each jar depict an elderly scholar reading a book to a young boy. Flowers, birds, and domestic fowl appear in fan- and ribbon-shaped panels. These decorative motifs derive from pattern books commonly used in eighteenth-century Chinese porcelain factories. Famille rose appeared in the 1730s as a result of the importa-tion from Europe of purple of Cassius (a pigment obtained from gold chloride). Source: Vignon, Charlotte.
